Artist: Temujin
 Title: 1000 tears
 Type: Album
 Label: Renaissance Records

Australia's contribution slight, in fact, I'm fair metal bands I'm familiar present sunshine that's idyllic setting to provide cringeworthy soapstar-over the years.

Thankfully Temujin don't Aussies. This duo of Kelly (else) must have spent time in cloud, as I don't think Kelly along Sidney bay in brig

Joining the ever expanding album shows Temujin to promise. Kelly's vocals strike me as very down-to-earth; she attempt to pull off anything too fancy. With the occasional sorrow upon the main musical foundations, at times leading get the distinct impression from what is on offer here that vocalist, and with a bit of vocal strengthening I would expect better than this.

Musically this is fairly solid stuff; there is an overall crunch Lacuna Coil. There are some clean, heavy guitar riffs such balanced out with well executed keyboard lines which add enough of the right places to boost the ambiance. The unfortunate some fine elements scattered throughout this record that there are no songs that really stand out or that strike me as days for them having just signed a deal with American label hope for slightly better things from them in years to come scene.
