1000 Tears is the debut album from the duo of Kelly and Karl Lean. At 56 Tears is taking it easy, using the best elements from acts like After Forever this enough to give 1000 Tears a listen?

It seems like Kelly and Karl Lean are playing it simple with their debut album. It's great, from the guitar work to the vocals. Even with all this great work I could find a lot of parts where Kelly's vocals should have been more symphonic-like or Karl's guitar is amazing us with some kick ass guitar solo. 1000 Tears just seems to play it safe and its feet wet.

No matter where you turn today there is a female fronted band in the symphonic metal scene. These bands are a dime a dozen then why would we need another band that really can't answer this questions per say, but if you listen to what these bands have to offer with passion and have for their music. It's just sad to hear that they didn't go on to do anything new.

There are times on this album where the songs seem to blend into each other. It was like I was listening to one huge track but then I turned down to see that two tracks were there. The song transitions are good, but this time I really can't say I enjoy because the songs are so similar.

Final Verdict

For their first full length I can hear some good things but there is a lot of room for improvement. I think if Temujin were to put more time into their next release we would get a much better album. Right now there are just too many bands like this now so there is a lot to choose from.
